The Seasonal School is aimed at students interested in deepening their knowledge of healthcare systems, from a triple perspective: the organization, the actors and the managerial levers able to optimize the performance of the health system towards greater quality, equity and sustainability. The program, in fact, focuses on the management and innovation of the healthcare sector, with a practical approach based on the analysis and interpretation of quantitative data through case studies and simulations of the healthcare context. The course explores not only some frontier issues in the age of information and data, necessary in modern society to enhance choices and decisions in complex contexts, but also the most recent lines of study resulting from the pandemic in terms of innovation of care settings and pathways and resilience of health and social services. In this sense, the students will be involved, through different perspectives, in a continuous study on the issues inherent to the enhancement of quantitative data not only as useful information for decision makers and managers, but also to support the innovation of health and social services.
